

6th London Interfaith Music Festival at the British Museum

30.04.2017 | JCR

This year, Faiths In Tune is teaming up again with The British Museum for the 6th annual London Interfaith Music Festival, Sunday, 21. May 2017.

On Sunday, 21 May 2017, the British Museum will for the second time host the FAITHS IN TUNE - London Interfaith Music Festival from 10 am to 5 pm. The festival will feature a diverse stage music and dance programme as well as an interfaith community fair where visitors can learn about and get in touch with various faith and cultural communities from all over London.

The British Museum is the UK's most visited attraction and a majority of the items on its display can be traced back to various religious backgrounds and sacred practices. The Interfaith Music Festival encourages visitors to look at the museum's exhibition not just in terms of cultural diversity and archeology, but through the glasses of faith and interfaith traditions. At the same time, the festival's main objective remains, as in previous years, the promotion of interfaith understanding, respect and dialogue by bringing people of all different faith backgrounds together through the universal language of music.

Further information and detailed program:

<http://www.faithsintune.org/london-2017-british-museum>